We'll do what I can back the crown. It looks fantastic when your done and is perfect for those days you want your hair half up and half down. You need:-1 comb-5 hair ties -1 Bobby Contact-1 hair clawStart by brushing your hair thoroughly, so you have no confusion. Then put the hair in 3 pieces. Your going to take one of the 3 sections of hair and mow it into the fishtail braid. You can put other sections so they won't put in your way. The second fish tail braid can be a little tricky. Depending on how you made your first second may be more or less. In my case it is smaller, so when I'm finished I'll expand it with my fingers. Once you finish both fish tails you will make regular braids with the last part of the hair. To put it all together, you'll rap a braid behind your head and over the opposite ear. To finish it out you can add a flower like I did or some other trendy design. I hope you enjoy it! Follow the latest daily buzz with buzzFeed Daily Newsletter! Double hair crowns appear as two spirals. In the 1975 genetic study of Wunderlich and Hereema, 1.5 percent of the population is estimated to have double crowns, according to John H. McDonald of the University of Delaware. Although double crowns are rare, there is no evidence that anything unusual causes them. Genetics define single or double crowns. Hair wails can grow in a spiral clockwise or counterclockwise formations, notes Amar J. S. Clare for Genetics. In the same Wunderlich and the study estimated that 94 percent of newborns in 1975 were clockwise. In 2004, Clare published an observed correlation between clockwise hair and right dominance. Similarly, people with counterclockwise whorls favored left-handers. As noted in the study, this may be a coincidence, since right-handed, like hair clockwise, is more commonly observed in the general population. In addition, studies conducted from 1975 to 2009 noted that most women do not have crowns as apparent as men; Instead, women have a scattered pattern of hair growth. It is more difficult to identify the crown in women with long or curly hair. Because of this, geneticists have been unable to identify the gene that causes double crowns, but claim that parents' hair tends to reflect their child's hair, McDonald notes.
